10.8.2 UNUSUAL CONSTRUCTION CHARGES	Ref
For special construction requirements, the customer incurs charges for the actual cost above normal construction costs. Normal construction includes all distribution facilities, aerial and underground, placed at the option and initiative of the Company.
When a customer requests changes from one type of construction to another on the customer's property, or when such changes are required by law, the customer incurs charges for the cost of constructing the new facility and removing the old facility.
When a customer requests that the Company move existing facilities, or when required by law, the customer incurs charges in an amount equal to the actual cost of the move, less salvage.
For construction to serve a project or subdivision, which, in the opinion of the Company is speculative or involves risk or delay in the use of the facilities provided, the Company may require a written agreement setting forth the amount and conditions for prepayment of the cost of construction or for refunding portions of the initial payment, if applicable, as the facilities are placed in service. The reimbursement process does not start until there is dial tone at a permanent structure. In the event the developer elects not to enter into an agreement, the subscribers are served based on other sections of this tariff. Any such agreements are subject to review and prior approval by the Regulatory Commission of Alaska.
