Updated November 2021

Welcome to Yukon TV!

Yukon TV is GCI's new TV streaming service that delivers your news, shows, and movies over an internet connection. Yukon TV lets you watch live or on-demand across your TV, tablet, or phone, and continues to offer many of the features of traditional cable box television like Video on Demand, DVR capabilities, channel guides, and more — though there are a few key differences.

Yukon TV:

- Is a streaming application, like Netflix, Hulu, and others
- Is delivered over a GCI internet connection (streaming does not count toward usage)
- Doesn't use a cable box; it uses a streaming device
- Allows you to watch TV on compatible phones, tablets, and TV streaming devices
- Delivers all content in high definition (HD)

Why Yukon TV?

Change is not always easy, and no one wants another hassle in their daily lives. While we understand this challenge, technology is constantly evolving and we must keep up so that we aren't left behind. Change is underway as cable boxes are being replaced by streaming devices, much like VCRs were replaced by DVD and Blu-ray players, making streaming apps the new, more efficient way to deliver video content. At GCI, we must follow suit with the TV industry and adopt streaming technology to deliver programming. The good news: as we upgrade the technology used to deliver TV services, not only can we continue to provide the best-in-class technology by delivering TV service over an internet connection, but we can also redistribute network resources to support upgraded internet and mobile capabilities, including 5G and 2 gig internet.

Why does Yukon TV require a GCI internet connection?

Yukon TV requires a connection to GCI's core network, which is the data source behind Yukon TV service. Unlike other streaming apps, streaming Yukon TV at home does not count toward your home internet plan's included high-speed data.
